HyperMotion Technology is the most realistic motion capture engine that FIFA has ever used. The engine combines data from gameplay from real-life players playing for FIFA, the best football teams in the world, and simulates every angle, run, tackle, header, pass and shot from real football. It also adds effects that are not possible without capturing real-life data - like ball control, ball sticking, slipping, diving, bending and swerving. The technology is the engine that drives real-world replays, and can be viewed in real time during play. There are also new starting positions for players to improve their footwork. New Fall Phenomenon Players can make key plays over the top of opposition players now and, in FIFA 22, your star players are more opportunistic. The new Fall Phenomenon creates an exciting new playmaking challenge for your players who now have the ability to exploit the drop of the ball over the top, and to start attacking quickly from deep positions. If your attacking midfielder is looking for a pass, but is over his area, and the ball is dropped by the defending goalkeeper, the player can now make a quick run to receive the ball and make an attacking run over the top. When the defender closes the space on the receiving side, the attacking midfielder now has the ability to dribble towards the penalty area. Adjustments to Player Power The range of strategic interactions between players is now easier to understand, thanks to the new Player Power system. At the heart of this is a new Player Power Profile, which can be found on the Player Card under the Player Power section. This tool allows you to adjust the power of your players by highlighting particular attributes. Your scouts, coaches and players will now be able to make better, more informed choices. You can even get more granular on the power of your players by simply highlighting an attribute in a player's profile. This will allow you to modify the power of an attribute, whilst keeping the other values at their default level. Improved Training Mode The pitch selection screen and Trainer can now create realistic pitch surfaces by altering texture, lighting and placement of specific parts. Furthermore, a range of new user-oriented features has been added. These include the ability to change the experience based on team and player preference, customise each player's physical attributes and more. New Pro
